Reservation of conscience

Soldiers, I am major Tom, Pete Tom, and it is my pleasure to welcome you in the german army. You are soldiers now. First rule and never to forget again:

reservation of conscience

What does it mean?

Do you know a remorse a bad or a guilty conscience?

Yes. Good.

You are young soldiers and must not shoot without order. Imagine the order:

Shoot!

Would you have conscience concerns after shooting an enemy who attacked you?

No. hm.

Would you have them shooting a disarmed prisoner?

Yes. Oh. Indeed? May I ask what kind of: remorse bad or guilty?

Guilty. Oh. "Why ...?"

bec....pt let's stop the nonsense here.

I meant "why did you shoot then?" I wanted to hear "no" twice. But only one dead enemy and one happy prisoner as result.

Imagine both situations without order.

Attacking enemy. Would you have waited for the order "shoot!"?

No. ok. So you would have ignored the general order "do not shoot without order!"

I want you to ignore every order which truly violates your conscience, not your safety! The job of soldier sometimes means to die. However you could shoot of course in self-defence like everybody. It is more than arguable that the general order not to shoot without order refers to attacking not defending shots.

I told you not to forget the first rule! Forget it never again!

And to be fair I hope that if I had asked whether you would follow the order to shoot the prisoner you would have given the right answer. Of course not.

How about this order:

Imagine you are navy commander who compares in ranking a lieutenant colonel and receive the order to protect the sea ways of Hormuz with your units and your vessel. Would you have conscience concerns?

No? ...oops, ok wait, you receive the order of course on a nice sunny day in Travemünde, your home port of Lübeck. How about now?

Mr. Norbert Röttgen (german mp, CDU) would not. He suggested a European military operation to secure these waters.

Norbert Röttgen, however, is no soldier. His job is not to defend the fatherland. He is not risking his life in fulfilment of his duties. He is the delegate who delegates this risk illegally to us.

Defending the fatherland

Orientation: discussion of topic 2 defending the fatherland within discussion of topic 1 reservation of conscience

Soldiers, what is your job?

I ask because my job as soldier, when I entered the army, was “Defending the fatherland”. But that was 30 years ago. Basic service including education was compulsive and only justified and justifiable like this. It was not only my job. It was the general job of the German army.

Why did you choose to become a soldier?

I assume in fact the job of the army today is to fulfil parliament mandates.

Did you think about the difference?

Yes. So either you do not care about conscience “issues” or trust in the conscience of our MPs which is in my eyes even worse.

Or you believe the Hindukush is a German colony. Ok sorry, you believe we can defend our fatherland Germany in Hindukush, or as asked in the Strait of Hormuz.

This is probably the good solution for the simple minds. Believe. Believe. Believe. Believe every mass media narrative and since the beginning of the day this ridiculous apostles creed.

Simple mind times have aged out though.

At least consciousness (bridge) times have been entered into ...

(actually frontally crashed into about seven years ago already (crashkurs3) before nature itself heralded nature age two and a half years ago (end of crime time table part one))

So let us start again.

And for the sake of goodwill let us say you could justify your profession choice in simple mind times but realize now that you have to adjust not only this conscience decision but your complete consciousness to the new times which you feel.

How is the order chain? The full order chain from head to foot soldier.

Head is the population of Germany. Agreed? Agreed. Ok. They claim it is represented by our parliament and I am not sure if I would agree here.

So already the very origin of every single military order (chain) is to be questioned. Is it indeed original or is it infringed. Does every single military parliament mandate mirror the peoples will?

No. ok. Should it? ... Is it the same like a tax increase? ... Ok. Admitted, a tax increase rather should too. But here it might be arguable that the general tax policy still mirrors the peoples will what shall here as premise be sufficient regarding the tax resort. That means every single tax law should but not necessarily needs to mirror the peoples will. Every single military mandate should not only but must meet the peoples will at least if we are conform in the opinion that the general job of the army to defend the fatherland has not changed only because our young sisters and brothers are not forced to military services any longer. Right?! Ok.

From the opposite viewpoint considered would we at least expect that this basic decision change of the general job of our army needed to be an immediate peoples decision (plebiscite). Or did you one time decide this or at least only consider this decision in any parliament election?

In the beginning years of reunified Germany it was at least still the green party for a while which opposed to outbound operations which obviously became now suddenly acceptable. Unified increased responsibility international partnership duties were the main stream narrations and in fact people on the streets and in their living rooms got used to this language.

Then, "Srebrenica" (stands for Balkan as a reply to Mr. Fischer who is demanding "never Srebrenica again!"), the first after the breach of "heavy" green resistance place taking military operation far outside of Germany paves the way. From then on parliament discussions become easier and of course absolute unproblematic since 9/11. The clearest case after Srebrenica of not defending the fatherland. Instead maybe the USA, however, not even close to their fatherlands but in Irak (George Bush benefitted of course too in the same way who claimed after 9/11 the right of preventive aggressive war actions).

Parliament discussions about single outbound mandates become generally accepted and often unproblematic while compulsory military service becomes problematic instead.

In 2011 eventually in an aggressively eastwards growing EU (Estland, Lettland, Litauen, Malta, Polen, Slowakei, Slowenien, Tschechien, Ungarn und Zypern joined the union in 2004 Bulgarien Rumänien in 2007 and they even began negotiations with Turkey in 2005 too stupid to realize that Turkey would never join them. However, unimpressed by the Turkish message “until her and not further!” they currently try to allure Montenegro, Serbien, Albanien Nordmazedonien, next to Island Norway and Liechtenstein) compulsory military service is abolished and growing people concern eased. Folks on the streets have in simple mind now that nobody of their family is concerned by, and generally nobody forced to take part in the stupid fulfilment of international duties. Although never decided legally, illegally and in fact, the general job of the army has changed conclusively.

And not only the general job has changed.

Expressly, they have abolished compulsory military services, in fact they have capped the military order chain in its origin. Head commander, in fact and in charge, is not the people any longer (who is not forced to provide for the staff any longer), but ..who knows ... probably still the mother of seven as European chef commissioner now (Ursula von der Leyen, german defence minister before AKK (Annegret Kamp Karrenbauer, Germany's next chancellor (and nobody feels embarrassed!)), both CDU without military basic education). Maybe Mr. Stoltenberg. Possible too. (Under hovering head commander Benedictus XVI of course.)

However, according to readjusted natural order concepts Germany is either attacked in Germany – undoubtable defence case – or the people must decide whether they want to try to be defended against a threatening oil supply shortage over there, in the middle east, already in order to prevent the “pending” physical attack on german grounds (defence case) maybe by Iran, possibly too Bahrein or a few Somali pirates perhaps who attack german Trave Münde in the Indian Ocean and submerge whole Lübeck over there.

You see, soldiers, not only you, my generation, now in higher responsible positions like our colleague commander Münde, too, decided to become soldier in simple mind times long, decades long, before natural consciousness times were imaginable and had to wake up meanwhile. The conscience concept since the continuance of simple mind times after world war 2 was quite simple: Order compliance the rule. Conscience check, more than ever conscience veto, exception for the lack of real military abroad operations. And due to the according limitation of army purposes in the basic law to the defence of the fatherland and enough war already in the recent past conscience concerns in the FRG of divided Germany indeed kept being exceptions. The simple rule was good until the big reunification. With it, shortly after our generation (Münde and Tom) had joined the army (1988), outbound operations suddenly became acceptable and after a few battle war participations (Balkan, middle east) compulsory military service was abolished in 2011. So for the past thirty years which equal the last 23 years of pure simple mind times plus seven weak up years (after peters massive mind bomb explosion in 2012 (its individual impacts described in letter111117 to Mr. Fischer) and heavy collective aftershocks in the following years (we come back to "Kafka's Heritage", peters reports on www.famlinezuechtigung.com, later)) commander Münde and major Tom had already to deal with the shifting conscience concept. Since nobody else did, step by step adjustments were not thought about and the clear adjustment now is still quite simple. Officers and soldiers with healthy conscious minds now simply need to adjust it fully, resulting in the opposite. Submit every single order to your conscience before complying with it. The rule now is not any longer compliance the rule conscience check exception. The rule now is:

Conscience check the rule, veto exception.

This means for our order and compliance concept:

In doubt you have to comply with your given order, of course!

Assuming Mr. Röttgen convinces his European colleagues and the EU sets up an own military action coalition and in the end a respective parliament mandate subordinates commander Münde under French head command in this operation.

I coincidently know him and he hates this vision. How should he behave?

Depends.

On what?

On the consequences he is facing if he refuses to take part in this operation.

Ok, what should he take into account?

End of soldier career.

Agreed acceptable. What is about plus a few years prison?

Hard.

Indeed. So what should he do?

No idea.

I haven't a specific one either but think he should not wait until it is too late and he in this situation.

Now he has several options. He could quit now and look for another job. Quite easy. Or he should become politically engaged, find out the positions of his comrades and try to increase their influence on the political decision makers or whatever is coming up by thinking. Think. Think at least is what everybody needs to do instead of believe only. And then maybe act. Before it is too late for himself one day.

And not only commander Münde is concerned because of the public discussion of an operation which touches his competence. All navy army and air force officers are concerned likewise.

So we can find single solutions for ourselves only like to quit the army, which was fair enough, or we consult each other and might find a collective basic solution for all of us. Maybe we can forge such a plebiscite for example or whatever comes up by multiple thinking.

For you soldiers that means nearly the same. You can quit now again, which was fair, not only enough like in our case. Or you think with us and help that we find a good solution for all of us (soldiers silver officers and maybe even golden officers (a few certainly)). I promise we try and I promise you will always be sufficiently informed of our progress.

Ok. Last example before lunch time. No officer a soldier case again:

Imagine the order of your colonel in charge:

“Soldiers our units have the pleasure to arrest the Düsseldorf government and parliament members. We leave tomorrow morning six a.m.!”

Conscience concerns?

And now:

Mahlzeit Kameraden! (german for lunch time)

We continue in two hours here ... where you let me know your concerns ...

... to be continued in ... “You are in the army now (episode two)”
